Rustenburg – The National African Federated Chamber of Commerce and Industry (NAFCOC) has urged emerging businesses in Rustenburg to be more innovative by looking beyond the mining industry and venturing into other areas such as manufacturing.

Established in 1964 as a vehicle to empower small businesses, NAFCOC is now one of the largest business chambers in South Africa with representation in the nine provinces of the country.

On Tuesday 19 November, several representatives from local small, medium and micro enterprises (SMMEs) interacted with personnel from NAFCOC, the Rustenburg Local Municipality (RLM) and Small Enterprise Development Agency (SEDA) during a business symposium held at the Rustenburg Civic Centre.

The objective of the symposium was to help local SMMEs to make their businesses more sustainable by diversifying their operations and making use of modern technological developments.

Various speakers urged SMME owners to establish ties with agencies such as SEDA to receive regular business advise.
